Narrator: Early the next morning, the most important men in the city were walking in the square below. The mayor, in company with the town councilors, was taking inspection.

“Our people are much better off since we became important,” said the mayor.

“Ah, yes!” nodded the councilmen.

“Have you noticed how much brisker business has become?” eagerly asked the clerk.

“Ah, yes!” approved the mayor.

But then they stopped short. Standing there by the column, they looked up at the statue.

Segue to No. 9, "Dear Me!"
